Welcome to Galaxy Zoo, where you can help astronomers explore the Universe

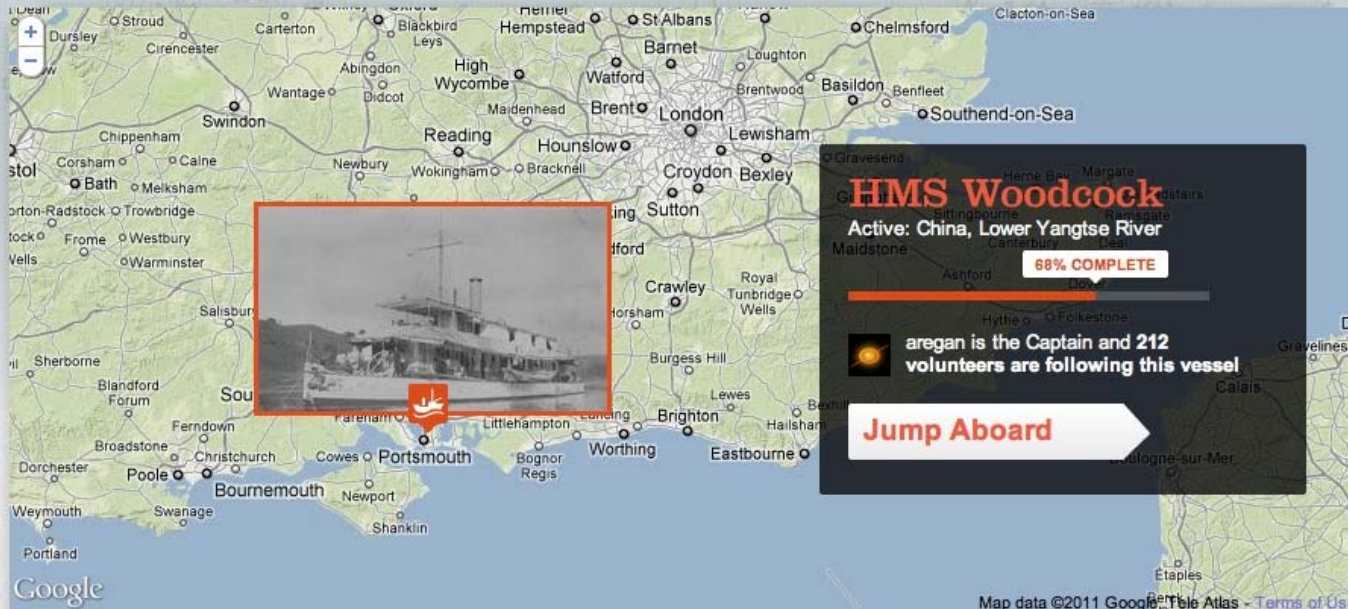

Galaxy Zoo: Hubble uses gorgeous imagery of hundreds of thousands of galaxies drawn from NASA's Hubble Space Telescope archive. To understand how these galaxies, and our own, formed we need your help to classify them according to their shapes — a task at which your brain is better than even the most advanced computer. If you're quick, you may even be the first person in history to see each of the galaxies you're asked to classify.

The image shows a Google Map of Southern England, centered on the London area. A red callout box is overlaid on the map, containing a photograph of the HMS Woodcock, a large steamship. The callout text reads: "HMS Woodcock", "Active: China, Lower Yangtse River", "68% COMPLETE", "Morgan is the Captain and 212 volunteers are following this vessel", and a "Jump Aboard" button. The map shows various towns and cities, including London, Reading, and Portsmouth.

Transcribe Bentham

Welcome to the Transcription Desk

The Transcription Desk is the heart of a major online initiative to transcribe the manuscripts of Jeremy Bentham from the archives of University College London. The project is funded by the AHRC, and managed by UCL Bentham Project and UCL Digital Humanities, with the support of the University of London Computer Centre.

Researchers and students interested in the works of Jeremy Bentham are invited to assist us by using the Transcription Desk to type up the text of the manuscripts. For each manuscript to be transcribed, the Transcription Desk shows a digital image of the manuscript and an online text editor to enter and edit your transcription of the text.

Help us improve Search the Collections

The new version of Search the Collections contains over 140,000 images. The images are selected automatically and as a result some of them may not be the best view of the object to display on the homepage of Search the Collections. We are using crowdsourcing to help us find the best crops (or views) .

How to join in

You will need to register so that we can make sure you do not get shown the same objects repeatedly.

The Task

For Search the Collections, photographs have been cropped into a square format to fit on the homepage of Search the Collections. The task is to improve those crops. Because the images are always square it may not be possible to achieve a useful crop showing the whole object, but we can make them display more interesting details so that users get the best possible experience.

What is Crowdsourcing?

Crowdsourcing is a way of using a lot of people to help complete a task or solve a problem on the web. By working with the group, or crowd, the Museum gains insight into its users' views and preferences.

Early Real Estate Atlases of New York

Over 2,000 maps of New York City, including Manhattan and Brooklyn "fire insurance maps" from the 1850s-1860, showing streets, blocks, tax lots, natural and manmade features, and more.

Collection History

This group of maps includes the extent of NYPL's holding of real estate maps by William Perris (d.1862), the English-trained civil engineer and surveyor who originated the format. The Perris maps depict Manhattan and Brooklyn in the 1850s-1860s, when the two boroughs were still separate cities; their sequencing replicates their original published volumes. Commonly called "fire insurance maps," these maps show streets, blocks, tax lots, and current use classifications; they also indicate locations of former streams and related natural features, earlier roads, previous land uses, lot lines, and more. Other makers or publishers over time include Hyde, Hopkins, Bromley, and the most recent and prolific, Sanborn. Today, "Sanborn" has become shorthand for "fire insurance map" to a wide range of map users in local government and the real estate, hazard insurance and related industries, throughout the nation and the world.

Other maps in this digital presentation include aerial maps of New York City from 1924, topographical surveys of Central Park, and atlases covering the Bronx, Long Island, Queens, and Staten Island.

Digitization of the "fire insurance" group of maps was made possible by a grant from METRO (Metropolitan New York Library Council).

Background

The New York City conflagration of 1835, which destroyed 20 million dollars worth of property and bankrupted many small insurance companies, brought about substantial changes in the way insured property was identified and described; the Perris maps were one of the results. Beginning with Perris's earliest productions, the format of the maps has stayed relatively constant, measuring slightly smaller than 2 x 3 ft., bound or in single sheets. Uniquely, NYPL's Perris map collection contains manuscript notations from previous owners, which possibly include a real estate office. These Menus Wanted for Historical Collection.

Miss Frank E. Buttles of the New York Public Library, Astor Library Building, New York City, is making a collection of menus for the library, and has written the HOTEL MONTHLY to enlist its aid in securing specimens from everywhere; which aid we cheerfully give, and herewith print extracts from her letter, so that any of our readers wishing to have some of their cards form a part of this historical collection, may send them to Miss Buttles direct:

"I am making for the Astor Library a collection of menus as a matter of historical interest in the next century, and have already deposited there 3,600 representing a wide reach of territory. * * * None are too ancient to be acceptable if only clean. I like the complete outfit for one or two days with any from the holidays, from patriotic societies and from special occasions that can be obtained. No such collection has ever been undertaken for a library and a long time will elapse before it can be equalled. * * * It is of the highest importance the cards should be well wrapped and then placed between stiff card-board of larger size, else they are sure to be soiled and broken in the mail, which condition renders them worthless. One beauty of this collection is, nearly all the 3,600 cards are perfect, but I have had to fight harder than Gen. Otis did in the Philippines to keep my standard in position. When it has to be lowered I shall discontinue the work."

Miss Frank E. Buttolph American Menu Collection, 1851-1930

Thousands of menus beginning with the oldest items in the collection from 1851. The collection is strongest for the period between 1890 and 1910. Organization is primarily chronological by date or range of dates.

Collection History

The menu collection originated through the energetic efforts of Miss Frank E. Buttolph (1850-1924), a somewhat mysterious and passionate figure, whose mission in life was to collect menus. In 1899, she offered to donate her existing collection to the Library – and to keep collecting on the Library's behalf. Presciently, director Dr. John Shaw Billings accepted her offer and for the next quarter century Miss Buttolph continued to add to the collection. Her principal method of acquisition was to write to every restaurant she could think of, soliciting menus. When letters failed, she often marched into a restaurant and pleaded her case in person. She also placed advertisements in trade publications like The Caterer and The Hotel Gazette, but just as often, published news of her collection prompted outright contributions of specimens from around the world. Three times between 1904 and 1909, The New York Times wrote about her and the collection, noting once that "she frankly avers that she does not care two pins for the food lists on her menus, but their historic interest means everything." Miss Buttolph added to the collection of more than 25,000 menus until her death in 1924. The collection has continued to grow through additional gifts of graphic, gastronomic, topical or sociological interest, especially but not exclusively New York-related.

NOTE: Some menus could not be imaged in their entirety due to their configuration (e.g. tied with ribbon or cord, stapled, etc.), their brittle paper, and/or their overall fragility.

Catch of the day: seafood trends

A Texas A&M oceanographer is poring over menus to analyze fishing

GALVESTON - Scientists trying to document worldwide commercial fishing trends in the last 150 years are turning to a seemingly unscientific data source — thousands of old restaurant menus.

Odd as it seems, the menu analysis by Texas A&M University-Galveston oceanographer Glenn Jones is drawing international interest. He is scheduled to present data from initial studies at a conference of ocean historians in Denmark this week.

Some of the information Jones has gleaned might shock today's restaurant patrons.

"Before the 1880s, it was unusual to see lobster on menus," said Jones. "It was considered trash fish that people didn't want"

Glenn said his interest in menus as historical resources evolved from a project in which he assigned students in a coastal resources class to study seafood price data based on prices in a 1950s restaurant menu he came across.

Besides documenting the rise and fall in popularity and prices of fish and mollusk species in restaurants, menus also provide scientists with serious documentation of the economics of commercial fishing over the decades, he said.

"Sea scallops don't show up on the menus until the 1940s," Jones said. "Before that, it was all bay scallops on menus. Now, bay scallops are pretty rare and the ones you get are real small"

Other U.S. seafood resources are depleted as well, Jones said. Industry records show oyster harvests from

High-End Dining in the Nineteenth-Century United States

WHAT WAS SERVED at fine restaurants in mid-nineteenth-century America? Despite public pieties of the time about self-sufficient frugality and austere "Republican virtue," the middle decades of the nineteenth century were gastronomically ambitious. Delmonico's in New York expanded from a coffee house to become the nation's first elegant restaurant in the 1830s, its French cuisine and punctilious service setting it apart from the usual run of taverns, bars, and chophouses. In succeeding years other fine restaurants afforded the urban upper and upper-middle classes opportunities to display wealth, status, and refined manners.

A penchant for showiness and the vogue for French culinary terminology are usually taken to demonstrate the inability of Americans to pull off anything better than tasteless opulence. Frances Trollope, mother of Anthony Trollope, in her celebrated Domestic Manners of the Americans (1832), summarized the food on offer as "abundant but not delicate." She praised canvasback ducks (an American game specialty) but found "a great want of skill in the composition of sauces." She also remarked, as many others would, on the lack of interesting conversation and consequently the surprisingly dull experience of dining in company.¹

The food served to well-off but not necessarily wealthy gourmands was indeed pretentious, with elaborate sauces often dressing up rather modest basic ingredients. Yet dining was by no means unsophisticated. Rather, in a pattern to be found consistently over the succeeding century or so, it combined international French style with clear American characteristics, the two not always consistently harmonized.

What follows concentrates on the dinners served at one of the most splendid establishments in New York, the Fifth Avenue Hotel, completed in 1859 on Madison Square, then the northern edge of the city's built-up area.² Despite its frontier location the Fifth Avenue Hotel was immediately popular with fashionable New York. Not long after the hotel opened, the social observer Reuben Vose wrote that in its precincts pass "more of the real beauty and wealth of the nation than in any other spot in the city."³

The Order of the Meal

As was the case with almost all serious restaurants, the hotel's menu was printed every day with new offerings or at least a new order of familiar dishes. The New York Public Library preserves bound volumes of Fifth Avenue Hotel menus from 1859 to 1865.⁴ The menus follow a format of service that was standard during the period. Hotels offered meals as part of the overall lodging charge (what used to be known as the American Plan), as opposed to separating the account for the room and meals (European Plan). The menus carry no prices except for the wines, which were an extra (and often considerable) expense. How the items on the menu were actually served and how the clients chose among them is not easy to determine. Courses were presented and retired rapidly, and foreign visitors observed with astonishment both the immense quantities served and the haste with which they were consumed.

These menus arrange courses partially by type of food (soup, fish, dessert)—an order with which we are familiar—but also by manner of preparation (boiled, roast), harkening back to medieval practice derived from medical, especially humoral, theories. The succession of courses in premodern Europe was arranged by method of cooking rather than by varying the primary ingredients.

A typical menu for the Fifth Avenue Hotel begins with two soups, two fish, and a half dozen or so boiled dishes (ham, calf's head, leg of mutton, beef tongue, and the like), followed by cold dishes (lamb, tongue, lobster salad). The entrées, a middle course, are of particular interest because the offerings varied from day to day (within an overall rotation and established typology) and also because these dishes tended to be more delicate and elaborately prepared, differing from the plain style of the other courses.⁵ Typically, there were from ten to fourteen entrées for each menu. After the entrées came roasts (ham, lamb, turkey, veal, beef) and then game (ducks in great variety and venison). Vegetables were probably served as side dishes, but How's it going?

As of Tuesday July 19, 2011, there have been 464,830 dishes transcribed from 8,713 menus.

What they're saying

Laura Shapiro, culinary historian and author of Perfection Salad:

"For anyone who studies the way people cook and eat, restaurant menus offer an extraordinary range of rich material that few other sources can match. But for obvious logistical reasons, it's never been possible to explore that huge trove of information in the depth it deserves. This project will open up the menus and all they can tell us about ingredients, dishes and meal structure, about the economics and sociology of eating out, about the very language of food."

Paul Freedman, Yale University, author of Out of the East: Spices and the Medieval Imagination, editor of Food: The History of Taste:

The New York Public Library (NYPL) had a problem to solve—they had a marvelous collection of 10,000 digitized menus from as far back as the 1850s, but no way to search the menus' contents. If readers wanted to figure out how popular pickled lambs' tongues were in 1900, their only recourse was to physically read through the menus from that year.

That's when the NYPL's Rebecca Federman, Culinary Collections and Electronic Resources Librarian, and Ben Vershbow, Manager of NYPL

WHAT'S ON THE MENU?

Among the stacks are 400 boxes containing almost 40,000 menus, collected over the past 170 years. The timeworn pages make up a narrative history, told through the ingredient preferences and cooking preparations that have marked culinary eras dating back to the earliest restaurants and beyond, and include menus from beloved ocean liners like Cunard.

The menus are not only a record of favored flavors—like the moon-size local bluepoint oysters served at Delmonico's in 1882, or the once ubiquitous pickled relish known as chow-chow—but also a symbol of the political, economic, and aesthetic spirit of a time.

To whom it may concern,

I am a university student that would like to try and organize a potluck transcription party for your "What's on the menu?" project. My goal is to get together enthusiasts and digital humanists interested in this type of work for some conversation, light transcription work, and food. Currently, you seem to have a very small number of menus available to transcribe online. Do you have more that you could make available for such an event? Please let me know as soon as possible so I can begin planning. I think this would be a fun way to introduce the subject of digital humanities into the greater university community while at the same time accomplishing a necessary and important archival task. Please let me know.

Thank you,

Claudette Raynor

Maury and the Menu: A Brief History of the Cunard Steamship Company

by Philip Sutton, Milstein Division of United States History, Local History and Genealogy, Stephen A. Schwarzman Building
June 30, 2011

In 1907 the Cunard Steamship Company launched the first of their Express Liners, the Lusitania and the Mauretania, ships that become bywords for speed, luxury and elegance in transatlantic travel. They were the first of the "Grand Hotels" at sea, sister ships each as long as the Capitol Building (and, interestingly, the Houses of Parliament), that came equipped with palm courts, orchestras, a la carte restaurants, electric lifts, telephones, and daily newspapers printed at sea. They were the first big British liners to be powered by four revolutionary Parsons steam turbine engines, and each had a top speed of over 25 knots. Unsurprisingly, both went on to hold the Blue Riband for fastest Atlantic crossing, and the Mauritania held the record for fastest eastbound crossing for nearly 20 years, between 1909 and 1929. Though always reknowned for their safety, Cunard ships did not always have a reputation for carrying passengers in speed and comfort...

The New York Public Library's What's on the Menu? transcription project includes a selection of menus from Cunard ships, including the Etruria (launched 1884), Campania (1893), Lucania (1893) and Mauretania (1907). Taken from the Library's extensive Menu Collection, one menu, dated Tuesday, November 26th, 1907, is for a luncheon served in the First Class Dining Saloon of the Mauretania. According to The New York Times the diners were not passengers, but 300 guests of the Cunard Line invited to inspect the "new quadruple turbine liner [...] at her pier." Built in Wallsend, Tyne and Wear in the North-East of England, by the Swan, Hunter and

Typing: Real World Application

Type to Learn (our typing program) is fun, but it's just a game. We've started volunteering in our class to work on a project that combines our typing practice with real world applications!

The New York Public Library was given thousands of antique menus and has started transcribing all of them with the help of volunteers. We're having a blast reading the menus, learning about foods and how prices have changed, and practicing our typing knowing that it's for the good of food history!

You can transcribe at home, too, from this website: <http://menus.nypl.org/>
