Building the Parks

The idea of setting aside green spaces as parks is not a recent idea, but in the second half of the 19th century the idea of creating and protecting some areas of the country as places that could be preserved on a grander scale expanded into something bigger. In the 20th century, the policies and management of these protected areas inspired a nation while at the same time helping to set a foundation for parks around the world.

What started off as a landscape turned into a place where roads, visitor centers, research centers, and other facilities were needed to maintain the integrity of these areas. The creation of the parks was not based just on the physical layout, but the political and managerial aspects as well that were need to decide what land the parks would maintain and how that would be done on such a large scale.

The Goodhue County Historical Society has an extensive photograph collection. Here are a few examples for you to enjoy. We also invite you to come to the history center to see these and other photographs first hand. Most photographs are in the archives, but we have copies available for anyone to examine. There are also many photographs on view in the exhibits throughout the history center.

CULTURE COLLAGE
Welcome to StackLife for the DPLA

StackLife demonstrates one way a group independent of the Digital Public Library of America can create its own way of browsing its collection, using the information made openly available by the DPLA. In this early version, you can browse a superset of books from the Hathi Trust and the Open Library that have been gathered by the DPLA.

StackLife shows you a book in the shelf it would be on in a physical library. The darker the blue the more often the book has been accessed. The book’s thickness reflects the number of pages. The longer the book, the longer ago it was published.

When you click on a book, StackLife shows you the subjects under which it’s been classified by librarians. Click on a subject and now you’ll see the other works in that category.

StackLife was created by Harvard’s Library Innovation Lab. Check our Frequently Asked Questions for more information. And here is our privacy policy.
A STRONG PUBLIC OPTION
Did you hear that Dan’s book is finally in the public domain? Too bad it doesn’t have zombies.
